RE: Status report on Intelligence Personnel Study

FROM: Don Wortman

Both the Senate (Charlie Battaglia) and the House (Tom Latimer) Committees have reacted favorably to the Panel's report. They find it comprehensive and thorough. The Senate was planning on a hearing in early May but postponed it because the Intelligence Community was not ready to address all the the Panel's recommendations, especially those that require statutory proposals. Latimer indicated they are waiting for the Community to come forward with statutory proposals.

In a subsequent conversation with [ ] of the IC staff, he indicated that implementation work on the Panel's recommendations was proceeding satisfactorily. He expected that the DCI would sign off on a status report to the committees this week. [ ] does not expect statutory proposals until September.

The most important action flowing from the Panel's work is that the FBI has forwarded to the Department of Justice a statutory proposal to exempt the FBI from the Title V general schedule and position classification requirements. John Meister of the FBI advised me that the Panel's report was a "substantive and significant factor in getting the FBI to move ahead on this proposal."

Frank Yeager, Jim Sweet, and I continue to advise the Defense Mapping Agency on their statutory proposals they are developing for greater flexibility in the human resources program. They want to present their ideas to you in May and we will be trying to schedule that soon.
